American Falls is a collection of short stories by Charles Baxter that was first published in 1985. The book won the PEN/Faulkner Award for Fiction and was a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize. The stories in American Falls are set in a variety of locations, but they are all connected by their exploration of the complexities of human nature and the challenges of modern life.

Baxter's stories are often character-driven, and he has a gift for creating characters that are both believable and relatable. The characters in American Falls are all flawed and struggling, but they are also ultimately sympathetic. Baxter writes with great compassion and understanding for his characters, and he is able to reveal their inner lives with great clarity and depth.

The stories in American Falls are also notable for their psychological depth. Baxter explores the inner workings of his characters' minds with great insight and sensitivity. He is able to capture the complex emotions and motivations that drive human behavior, and he does so with great subtlety and nuance.

American Falls is a challenging and rewarding collection of short stories. Baxter's writing is intelligent, compassionate, and insightful, and he has a gift for creating characters that stay with the reader long after the book is finished. American Falls is a must-read for anyone interested in contemporary American literature.
