Heartbreak High was created by Ben Gannon and Michael Jenkins as a response to the perceived lack of authentic and relatable Australian teen dramas. Inspired by John Hughes' films and the American series Beverly Hills, 90210, they sought to create a show that would resonate with young Australians and address the complex issues they faced.

The series was initially rejected by several networks before being picked up by the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) in 1993. The pilot episode, titled "Boys and Girls," aired on May 6, 1994, and quickly became a hit.
